“Podcast Movement is excited to partner with Libsyn to shine the spotlight on this year’s Hall of Fame inductees. These podcasters have paved the way for the rest of us. It is our pleasure to honor their contributions to this medium,” said Jared Easley, Co-Founder of Podcast Movement.

“Much has changed in the podcast industry since the Podcast Hall of Fame last took place in 2018. We’re entering an accelerated growth wave driven by a proliferation of new shows from a new generation of diverse creators, massive listenership growth, the introduction of new innovations, and the stage is set for greater podcast monetization as more advertisers embrace the medium. It’s easy to understand why podcasting has never been more popular – and that’s chief among the reasons that we worked with Podcast Movement to bring the Hall of Fame back,” said Brad Tirpak, CEO, Libsyn.

A Hall of Fame Retrospective

Launched in 2015, the Podcast Hall of Fame’s mission is to recognize and celebrate the distinguished group of individuals who are making an impact on the podcasting industry. The influence of these inductees has been ongoing and their contributions demonstrable. The Hall of Fame last took place in 2018 and has since been revived by Podcast Movement and Libsyn. Past notable inductees include No Agenda co-host and former MTV VJ Adam

Curry, TWiT.tv founder and owner Leo Laporte, and New York Times best-selling novelist and podcaster Scott Sigler.

“What makes the Hall of Fame award stand out is that it recognizes contributions to the podcasting industry as a whole as well as recognizing excellence in podcasting itself. We're thrilled to honor these impressive podcasters and valued community members as the 2022 class of inductees,” said Mignon Fogarty, 2016 Podcast Hall of Fame Inductee, Induction Committee Vice Chair, and Grammar Girl creator.
